The digital age is increasingly presenting new avenues for both employers and jobseekers. In an age where 4 out of 5 people own a smartphone, the digital job search process via apps is gaining popularity. Employers are increasingly conducting some of their hiring processes through mobile apps. In no particular order, here are five free job search apps that are worth installing on your smart device to facilitate your job search.

Snagajob

Billed as the champion for part-time and hourly workers, the Snagajob app offers you the opportunity to browse thousands of jobs postings and apply with a single click. You can import your profile from social medial platforms like Facebook and google to create your account. In order to stand out for employers, include as much information about your skills, education and experience as possible. Some employers might redirect you to their company websites to complete the application process.

JobGet

A very interactive app where you can set up your profile in less than 5 minutes and with a click instantly apply for jobs. With a user-friendly interface, the app affords you a direct and fast opportunity to text-chat with employers and schedule interviews on the spot. JobGet has a live-person chatroom, and a blogpost packed with interesting information that jobseekers will find informative.

CareerBuilder

The app lets you build your resume, and set up job search filters based on experience, salary, qualifications and education. CareerBuilder boasts of millions of jobs at any given time, and once set up, the jobseeker can apply to 25+ jobs in a matter of seconds and get notified once their application has been viewed.

Good.co

Connected to many major job search engines on the web, the Good.co app considers work-life balance as its driving force. The app administers a short personality quiz to align your personality and working style with the best company cultures and job openings out there. The app will then redirect you to the jobs on other search engines.

Remotely Job Search

The app is strictly for someone who wants to work remotely. It has full-time, part-time, freelance, contract and internship positions. You can post, respond to and receive messages on the community message board. The app allows you to message with employers and recruiters and notifies you when you receive a reply.

These and other apps are invaluable to any job seeker in the job search process. The apps will require you to summarize all your skills and qualifications, so be ready to have a good understanding of your skills, prioritize the most marketable skills and don't sell yourself short on keywords that match the job or the industry. Finally, even if it is an app, professionalism is still required. So let your language you use and any chats, video or images you post there attest to that. Wishing you great success with your job search!
